OVERVIEW

History

Named for pioneer surveyor, Abram Maury, Maury (pronounced MURR-ee) County was open for settlement after the signing of the Dearborne Treaty of 1807. The next year a small group of South Carolina Presbyterians moved into the area and established a settlement known as the Zion Community.

Agriculture dominated Maury County's early industry with a number of mills and tanneries. A leading mule market for more than a century, Columbia continues to celebrate the working breed during it's annual Mule Day celebration.

Maury County was home to the eleventh President of the United States, James Knox Polk (1845-1849). His restored ancestral home in downtown Columbia is one of many homes where visitors can take a walk into the past.

Maury County is known as the Antebellum Homes Capital of Tennessee. Between 1810 and 1860 plantations flourished. Many of the homes were built by master craftsman, Nathan Vaught.

In the mid 1980's, Maury County's economic future was shaped by the announcement that GM would build their Saturn auto plant in northern Maury County. Today, Maury County boasts a diverse economy, a thriving courthouse square, and three primary cities: Columbia, Mount Pleasant, and Spring Hill. Currently Maury is the fastest growing county in the state of Tennessee.
